Sarcoplasmic reticulum Ca2+-ATPase 2 (SERCA2) is an important regulator of heart and muscle function. In a previous R21 we determined that disease causing mutations in the SERCA2 gene were associated with cardiac hypertrophy. We proposed that increased m-calpain activation and impaired SERCA2 activity lead to myocyte cell death, and serve as the pathological basis of heart failure. Based on these data we hypothesized that SERCA2-directed therapies would ameliorate disease pathogenesis in the presence of reduced m-calpain activity, and would improve clinical outcome in patients with SERCA2 dysfunction. In this R33 renewal, we propose to focus on enhancing the efficiency of SERCA2 transport function in the heart. We have devised peptides that can be delivered into heart tissue to either enhance SERCA2 activity, or inhibit m-calpain activity, or both. We will administer our m-calpain inhibiting peptides to a mouse model of heart failure, the cardiac hypertrophic
